Not illustrated. 1840 Excerpt: . . . JACOT; AN ADVENTURE ON BOARD THE ST. GEORGE. The packet ship St. George left New-York, bound to London, on the first of May, 183-. It was towed, as is customary, to Sandy Hook by a steamer filled with the passengers and their friends. A passage across the Atlantic is now of such common occurrence, that it no longer excites the sensations it did even ten years ago; but there is still sufficient danger hovering over that wide ocean, which, added to the uncertainties of a long absence, gives a deep interest to the parting scene. . . . The most careless observer must have felt that morning on board the St. George the beauty of the various bonds by which the human family are bound together. Here was a father standing with thoughtful aspect beside his son, a young artist, who was going to...
