Createspace Independent Publishing Platform, United States, 2015. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 203 x 127 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Captain Silas can be found on most days and for that matter most times of the day, propping up the bar of his local pub. From his perch on the same bar stool that he sat on fifty years ago, and with a frequently replenished glass of whatever is on offer his adventures and drunken escapades flow freely. Silas is a very decent sort of bloke. He is a salt of the sea, but if you haven't got a couple of hours to spare, if you don't have an ear for a racing sea adventure or two and if you begrudge an old codger a whisky or three then don't sit down; go on, move on up the bar and let another sit for the ride. Silas can never quite grasp the fact that the disastrous results of his many escapades are invariably due to his alcohol befuddled mind. That includes the time when his ship was apparently attacked by pirates in the middle of the Indian Ocean despite teaching the cook how to make Molotov cocktails, and not to mention that other disaster near Morocco when his spic-and-span cruise ship unexpectedly hit some rough weather. Now that was when he accused some Moroccan teetotalers of drinking his wine. Yes, from Venezuela where he ended up in jail after over-dosing on baked-beans, to Papua New Guinea where he upset the commodore of the Royal Australian Navy, Silas gives vivid recount as he remembers it. In fact, even in Taiwan, when he accidentally lost the entire crew's football pool winnings, or that time when he was chased by two machete-wielding locals or...
