Excerpt: . . . 6 Computer Technmology in Medical Education and Assessment to providing better data for generation of standards, computer data bases could allow better comparison of present standards and norms of care with actual patient outcomes. These data bases also could permit the development of computer consultant systems. Feedback from medical information and health data systems could provide continuous updating of the data bases. Such data bases could be linked to education and assessment systems for improve-ments in both areas. Early in the medical education and assessment continuum, the em-phasis is on the accumulation, retention, and application of knowledge on which deci-sionmaking in future practice will be based. This general medical education is quite dif-ferent from the specialized training that follows undergraduate medical education. Fur-thermore, there is an inherent problem in deciding what aspects of clinical practice should be emphasized in the general medical education curriculum. Computerized data bases could help to highlight areas of knowledge and skills that need further emphasis. They could dynamically link medical education to ongoing patient care. The develop-ment of computer course work for learning and testing calls for specificity in defining ob-jectives and in correlating the knowledge and skills to be acquired with the objectives. Techniques for accomplishing such specificity could help improve the quality of informa-tion collected in medical information systems. This report emphasizes the positive aspects of the application of computer technol-ogy. It is beyond the scope...
