Excerpt: .the right-angled triangular prism, Fig. 5, or the equi. tri. prism, Fig. 6. All of these will be valuable as reviews, and any or all of them might be given to great advantage for quick work on the blackboard, preceding the work Fig. 5. Fig. 6. in the Drawing-Book. It may be well to give the pupils an opportunity to do the work for this exercise by individual study of the models, without suggestions of any sort from the teacher. If pupils are very familiar with the models, these exercises may be given from memory. Drill.--As there are several circles to be drawn in the border, it may seem desirable to give a drill exercise that will call for circles. A border of circles is therefore suggested, that may be given as practice for this exercise; or it may be given as practice for Exercise XV. If, however, drill does not seem necessary for either of these exercises, the page can be used for an exercise in Construction, Representation, or Decoration, according to the need of the teacher. To be developed.--Views of combinations of models; appearance of combinations; quality of line. Study of the Models by Pupils.--Place a sphere on the centre of the top face of the square prism, as in the illustration in the Drawing-Book. Lift the book until the top of the square prism is on a level with the eye, and study the models. What is the proportion of the square...
